

Connected Learning grow. connect. educate. with Jesus.

MWA is passionate about providing a high-quality, wholistic, Seventh-day Adventist high school education to as many students as possible across North America. MWA views Connected Learning as its way to be true to Jesus' Great Commission of Matthew 28:18-20, by bringing Christ-centered, quality teaching and learning to students, wherever they live.

What is Connected Learning?

Connected Learning is an education model that leverages live video conferencing technology to provide a complete, interactive educational experience for high school students on multiple campuses or in a home setting. During classes, students connect with their teachers and classmates in real time. Students are also trained to utilize a specific set of online tools to manage textbooks, assignments and projects, and to communicate outside of class with their teachers and classmates.

What are some of the benefits of Connected Learning?

- Available to any student in the North American Division
- Provides an option for a student to live at home while attending an Adventist school
- Affordable tuition rates
- Engages home-school families on a class-by-class basis
- Enhances accessibility for all students through archived recorded classes
- Prepares students for life beyond high school through use of technology
- Encourages students to develop a nationwide friendship network
- Extends the Maplewood Academy spirit and community to many locations
- Enables high school students to continue regular involvement with local church activities
